Background:

Cynthia Carroll met with Administrator Jackson in early May to discuss Anglo American's role in the Pebble Project in Alaska, including the company's enterprise development and sustainable development approaches to its projects worldwide. This discussion was in the context of the Pebble Project in Alaska that is 50% owned by Anglo and concerning which the EPA is conducting a watershed assessment. The Administrator expressed interest in these economic empowerment and sustainable development approaches by Anglo as they relate to social justice issues for local people.

This request for a meeting with the Administrator is to further the dialogue about issues that Ms. Carroll and Administrator Jackson discussed, with four Anglo employees who have first-hand experience with the results of the company's enterprise development and sustainable development approaches at Anglo's Mogalakwena Mine in South Africa. Ms. Carroll would like to introduce the Administrator to these employees and continue that productive conversation.
